

Types of Australia Credit and Debit Cards

The credit card market of Australia has been striving to create a balance between high levels of consumer rewards and complete security. This is difficult to achieve but the increasing numbers of credit card users in the country have indicated that they might be succeeding. There is something for everyone with Australia credit cards whether you are a businessperson, a consumer, or a frequent traveler to the country.

Several of the most popular cards are American based companies, but Australia debit card companies issue most of the top five. For example there is the Aussie Mastercard, the ANZ Balance Visa, and the NSB Low Rate Visa Card. While it may be difficult for someone not familiar with the different cards to find a difference there are several. Cards offered by Australian companies generally specialize in one or two different benefits. Often this is indicated by their name. For example the Balance Visa may offer a low interest rate for purchases the real rewards and benefit will be for balance transfers. That is what the card is directed toward and will provide a greater benefit.

The popular Australia credit cards that are offered by American based companies are generally more all inclusive with their rates and rewards. For example, a card may offer no annual fee, a low interest rate on balance transfers, and a reward program. This can be both good and bad for consumers. If you have no specific use for the Australia credit cards then a card that offers a little of everything is perfect for you. But if you anticipate that you will need the card primarily for balance transfers, then one specialized for that will be more beneficial.

In general most of the types of credit cards have a low interest rate when compared to cards from other countries. All of them will employ the required 55 days of zero interest on purchases once the account is opened and most will have zero interest on balance transfers for up to 6 months. These benefits are nearly universal in Australia, the other features of the types of cards is where you need to make a decision about what is best for you.
